

Does Your Business Have a Brand — or Just a Business?

18-point audit across three categories. Check what applies. See where you stand.

PART 1 — PHILOSOPHY 6 points

- One Idea
Can you articulate what your business gives the client in one sentence that someone hearing about you for the first time would understand?
- Niche Pattern
What visual or verbal code does everyone in your category use automatically? What can you deliberately disrupt?
- Specificity
Find one "correct" phrase on your website that sounds like everyone else's. Can you rewrite it into a detail only your business can say?
- Internal Credibility
What details of your business will only someone deeply in the field recognize? Are you showing them — or hiding them?
- Emotion
What happens to the person at depth when they work with you? Have you named that emotion out loud — or are you staying in the safe zone of "results"?
- Story
Do you have one story about the origins of your business that can be retold in 30 seconds, with a turning point and a concrete emotion?

PART 2 — MECHANICS 6 points

- Audience Before Offer
Do people follow your thinking before they need your service — or do they only find you when they're already searching for a solution?
- Seeding Instead of Advertising
Who can you give genuine value to this month — people whose voices carry weight in your niche — without asking for anything in return?
- Rhythm and Events
Do your clients have specific moments to look forward to — a launch, a seasonal offer, an enrollment window, an annual event? Or is your offer always the same with no reason to act now?
- Partnership Through Status, Not Discount
When you collaborate with others — do those partnerships raise your perceived value, or lower it?
- Email List as an Asset
Are you collecting emails? Do you have a welcome sequence of at least 5 emails?

■ Content Proportion

Check your last 30 posts. What percentage is culture and value? What percentage is direct selling? If the ratio isn't 70/20/10 — you have work to do.

PART 3 — LIFECYCLE 6 points

■ Progression System

Does your business have tiers, statuses, or stages that clients move through over time — or does every client have the same experience regardless of how long they've been with you?

■ Deepening Over Time

What does a client receive after six months or a year of working with you that they didn't receive on day one? Is there a reason to stay?

■ Inner Circle

Do you have something reserved for your most committed clients — access, recognition, or involvement that others don't have?

■ Intentional Discounts

If you offer reduced pricing — is it tied to a specific identity, moment, or relationship? Or is it available to anyone?

■ Referral by Invitation

Who has the right to bring others into your world? Everyone — or only those who already understand what you stand for?

■ Low-Threshold Entry

Can someone begin engaging with your brand before they're ready to pay — through content, a free resource, a conversation? Or is the first step always a purchase?

0 – 6 ✓ You have a business, not yet a brand. Good news: the gap is visible and closeable.

7 – 12 ✓ You're building. Some pieces are in place. You need a system to connect them.

13 – 18 ✓ You have a brand. Now scale it. The next question is lifecycle and community.

Thank you for taking the time to go through this.

Eighteen questions is not nothing — it means you're thinking seriously about your business, not just running it day to day.

If some of these points didn't land where you wanted. If you're stuck on one of them and not sure where to start. If you're looking for a fresh perspective from someone who will look at your specific situation — not a template, not a generic framework, but yours.

I'd like to invite you to a discovery call.

I'll look closely at where you actually are — your website, your positioning, your content, your sales path, your product. We'll talk about what's working, what's quietly costing you, and what I'd change first if I were in your seat.

It's free. It's personal. And honestly — it helps me too. Every conversation makes me sharper. Every business I look at teaches me something I couldn't have learned any other way.

One thing worth knowing: I keep these calls limited. Not as a tactic — I genuinely can't do this well for everyone at once. Right now there are a few spots open. If this landed for you, now is a good time.

So if you're open to it — let's talk.
